DOCTORS' ATTITUDES TOWARD LEARNING ENGLISH: A NEEDS ANALYSIS REPORT

Khusenova Shosura Toshtemirovna,

Master's student at Karshi State University, Linguistics (English)

E-mail: shosurakhusenova@gmail.com

Abstract. This study examined the attitudes of healthcare staff at hospital in a region Kasan towards learning English for medical purposes. The main aim was to understand their perspectives and identifying our steps to take for the development of English for Medical Purpose (EMP) teaching program. The results revealed that while most younger doctors expressed a desire to learn, senior doctors showed less interest. This difference in motivation will be considered in the program's design, particularly in addressing the needs of both younger and more experienced physicians.

SHIFOKORLARNING INGLIZ TILINI O'RGANISHGA BO'LGAN MUNOSABATLARI: EHTIYOJLAR TAHLILI

Husenova Shosura Toshtemirovna

Annotatsiya. Ushbu tadqiqot amaldagi tibbiyot xodimlarining ingliz tilini kasbiy maqsadlar uchun o'rganishda bildirgan fikrlarini o'rganishni maqsad qilgan. Bundan tashqari, ularga til o'rganish jarayonlarini osonlashtirish va yordam berish maqsadida kelgusida inobatga olinadigan jihatlardan va qilishimiz mumkin bo'lgan ishlar aniqlab olindi. Natijalarga ko'ra, yosh shifokorlarning tilni yetarli darajada o'rganishga bo'lgan istak va ehtiyojlari yuqori, ammo o'rta va katta yoshli xodimlarda munosabatlar bu darajada emas. Asosiy sabablar sifatida ish miqdorining ko'pligi va ingliz tilini o'quv markazga borib o'qish uchun vaqt yetishmasligi kabilardan belgilandi.

Introduction

Needs analysis is an important step before designing any language course. It will reveal the current needs, wants, and lacks of target students and will help to develop an effective curriculum with all the objectives, instructions, and activities that will meet the needs of a particular group of students. In this needs analysis, the researcher decided to use the triangle method advised by Richards (2001); three instruments—a placement test, a questionnaire, and an interview—were chosen to conduct the needs analysis. As an initial stage, it was advised that there is a group of therapists who are willing to learn English for their professional purposes. So, the focus was on doctors and nurses. Having contacted to the head doctor of the department by phone and by visiting, the analysis was started. There were 14 people, both doctors and nurses, who were eager to learn the language.

Literature review

In our country, every year, several areas of science are selected and developed with special attention. In recent years, healthcare and foreign languages have been identified as such priority areas. On May 6, 2021 under the chairmanship of the President Shavkat Mirziyoyev, a video selector meeting was held regarding measures to improve the system of teaching foreign languages. The president highlighted the need to develop a new system for teaching foreign languages to strengthen the country's future prospects. Achieving national competitiveness depends on ensuring that graduates at all levels of education are proficient in at least two foreign languages. This standard should serve as the primary criterion for assessing the performance of educational leaders.

English for non-linguists, particularly for future healthcare professionals, is the key on their way to success. With poor command of English, it is almost impossible to read the world's renowned and respected medical journals. Moreover, it is difficult to keep updated without visiting scientific conferences around the globe. They also lose the opportunity of participating in different online seminars and conferences. Therefore, English as a subject should be treated by medical students with due respect [Rodin. E.V., Travinkova N.G (2017)]. Likewise, Kang (2004) connected the importance of knowing English for doctors with the fact that today all medical information for medical professionals is being updated and shared in English.

Some researchers and teachers share their experiences so that we can manage EMP classes successfully. Maher (1986) emphasizes that English language course should particularly improve the speaking skills of EMP learners. To achieve it, content-based and problem-based instructions should be integrated. In addition, to provide real-life communication in a class, there are modern technological opportunities to include and leverage. Niazi (2012) claims that medical English language teaching requires new and modern approaches. There should be a difference between general English or EFL classes and classes for medical students. The purpose of those students here is not only to collect linguistic information about grammar and vocabulary. A successful pedagogue can integrate medical discourse within the medical lesson to make it engaging. DuGas, Esson, and Ronaldson (1999) have given a lesson format on how to develop an EMP curriculum that follows an 'A'- 'B' format. Lesson 'A' relies on vocabulary acquisition. Lesson 'B' offers to apply learning from the following lesson into context. Learning exercises in Lesson 'B' involves using real hospital forms and charts, using medical equipment, and simulations related to the key subject. They have also suggested that these points should be considered when teaching EMP:

- It is necessary to emphasize on grammar, structure and vocabulary acquisition.
- Teachers are mandatory to be language instructors as well as health professionals

Research methodology

Target subjects: medical staff of Kasan District Medical Center.

As a matter of fact, three days before, we shared a Google form of a survey containing 10 questions with one familiar doctor working there. The questions were written in Uzbek language with Cyrillic letters as many doctors there are older than 30. The Google survey form was sent; however, replies were not as many as we expected. The main reason for it is related to limited time or lack of attention by healthcare professionals at that time. Therefore, we decided to visit and have a face-to-face interview and conversations with them.

Results and discussion

The short interviews with the staff showed that majority of participants want to learn English for various professional reasons. The most frequently given reasons included, being able to read medical textbooks and journals in English, communicate with foreign colleagues, read the written instructions of hospital equipment, and at least participate in international medical conferences and forums. They also mentioned that knowing English would give opportunities to go abroad to have doctoral exchange programs, where they can gain new experience and knowledge that will help to improve medical conditions in the country.

The placement test, designed to check grammar and vocabulary knowledge, indicated that most of the doctors had elementary level, and one – intermediate level. Test papers containing 15 questions were distributed and we talked with them to evaluate language skills. All had different language learning backgrounds. Some learned the language just to have a second operational language for communication, while others did so to follow a career path. Yet, none of them were able to master the language. Based on the findings, it is important to design a course and/or mobile applications specialized to teach medical English lessons where their needs will be met sufficiently. It is true that there is a shortage of highly qualified medical staff who know English. Therefore, providing a course to these individuals will be of high benefit to both the subjects studied and the country.

Language areas	Errors	Example
grammar	verb confusion and word order	I am work at hospital, I am wanting English learn, I am Eski shahar from...
vocabulary	Interference with Russian	Open the okno
pronunciation	certain letter combinations mispronouncing	Patient – (patent), cancel - (kenkl)
speaking	translating word by word and L1 interference; hesitation	You should drink drug or pill; put blood to the patient So, like, ok, hmm, ...
reading	lack of vocabulary	... being unable to translate the medicine prescriptions
cohesive devices	limited usage, repetition	and..., so...,
writing	writing what they hear	I need water – Ay ned water; chemistry - chemistri
article	Incorrect usage	A blood

Methodological considerations/ recommendations

Although the initiative to help doctors learn English by identifying their learning needs was good, the research was restricted with a single medical center. Future research should involve a broader range of medical professionals by contacting and visiting multiple healthcare facilities. The most importantly, online mobile application should be designed to teach English for medical purposes. Such applications are available – Ibrat Academy in Uzbek-English mode to teach the language for general purpose. But, the one the doctors need should facilitate learning and minimize the time they spend. Otherwise, finding time to visit language centers is almost impossible.

Conclusion

According to the questionnaire, it is obvious that most students want to learn English for academic achievement in their field. Some claimed that English is important because it gives them opportunity to go abroad and to acquire experience in advanced medicine – that is, giving high quality consolation, identifying exact diagnosis and leaning most practical therapies used in developed countries. At the same time, members of the needs analysis admitted that the biggest hindrance in the way of language learning is that they are overloaded with work, and they have no time to practice language skills. Second, even when they get to practicing English, they feel lack of motivation either because of feeling tired or choosing inappropriate material to learn. Their primary want is to master spoken and written skills, while claiming that if these two skills are mastered then the remainder will be mastered naturally. As for their strengths, it is clear that most of them have good reading skills; it is because they mostly learned English by reading and analyzing medical texts. Their lacks, on the other hand, were in that they did not know much medical terminology of types of illness, body parts, chemical elements and categories of medication.
