Introduction. From an economic perspective, food security holds a pivotal position within a nation's economic security framework. The essential requirement for sustenance is a fundamental necessity for citizens in any country worldwide. Consequently, ensuring the population's access to food, meeting their needs comprehensively, and enhancing the quality of food products are issues of perpetual significance. In both developed and developing nations, guaranteeing food safety exerts a significant influence on national economic development, resolving issues related to social welfare, and maintaining social stability. The assurance of food security is contingent on the level of advancement in the agricultural sector and indicators of agricultural production. The progress in this sector, to some extent, relies on climatic conditions and natural variables [10; p. 68].

The matter of food safety in a nation is directly intertwined with factors such as the socio-economic environment, natural and economic potential, the financial capacity of the population at both the national and regional levels, the extent of dependence on imports in the domestic market, agricultural production, and the judicious utilization of land resources, along with the agro-industrial complex's dependence. In this light, securing food safety in the nation assumes strategic importance within economic policy, as these considerations are pivotal for ensuring economic and social stability as well as state independence.

As President Sh. Mirziyoyev of the Republic of Uzbekistan rightly emphasized, "...our primary objective is to reform the management structure of the agricultural sector, introducing advanced technologies for the efficient utilization of land and water resources, and securing food safety" [2; p. 1]. Ensuring food safety stands as a macroeconomic challenge that connects the intensification of agro-industrial production on one hand and the enhancement of social production efficiency and incomes on the other. Therefore, when addressing these issues, it is imperative to incorporate state regulatory mechanisms alongside market forces. In this context, a significant task today is the analysis of the methods and methodology involved in forming the food safety system, including the factors that influence it at various hierarchical levels, and the development of criteria for national and regional assessments.

Since the early years of independence, the question of food safety has been central to Uzbekistan's socio-economic policy. Today, concerns about improving the population's well-being and the quality of life, along with ensuring their full access to food, are inextricably linked to the issue of food safety. Consequently, the need for a scholarly, theoretical, and practical examination of the theoretical foundations and priorities of food safety in Uzbekistan, through the implementation of food programs, underscores the relevance of this research topic [12; p. 3].

Literature review. Solving the theoretical and practical problems of Food safety as an integral part of economic security and substantiating its role in the development of society, human well-being by various CIS economists D.V.Zerkalov in the monograph "Food safety" many practical analyzes are given [13; p.45].

There is an analysis of many official statistical materials on the emergence of Food safety water scarcity in the XXI century and its transformation into a global economic problem. Another economist, L. Revenko, in his official article "Food safety: There is an opportunity to find a solution" raises the issue of Food safety on the world stage, mainly the distribution of external flows, ie the production capacity and capacity of countries [11; p.16].

While some aspects of the problem under study in Uzbekistan are studied in general in the textbook "Economic Security of the State" by H.P.Abulkasimov, another economist N.H.Ergashev shows the importance of insurance in ensuring Food safety in Uzbekistan [1; p.128].

Also, economists of our country Sh.Shodmonov, A.Olmasov, T.Juraev, D.Tajibaeva studied some aspects of food safety in their textbooks and manuals.

It should be noted that although research conducted by foreign scholars has used official publications for many years, no practical recommendations and suggestions have been made on how to address them within the national economy. In the studies studied, the issue of Food safety was mainly considered as a factor driving global economic security.

Research Methodology. The study was conducted in order to improve the theoretical and practical aspects of Food safety, and identified clear priorities. The article seeks to shed light on the problem using methods such as analysis and logic, as well as a practical analysis of agricultural lands and products, which are among the leading sectors in ensuring Food safety in Uzbekistan. The information required for the study was obtained mainly from foreign literature, statistical and regulatory databases.

Analysis and results. With the growing population of the country, the decline of agricultural land in the context of intensification of urbanization processes, the issue of expanding opportunities for food production and meeting the needs of the population is becoming more acute from year to year. According to a study conducted by the British Economist Intelligence Unit, Uzbekistan ranks 83rd in the ranking of food safety. Analysts studied and evaluated the quality, safety, adequacy and popularity of food products in 113 countries around the world. [8; p.1].

The area of agricultural land in the country increased from 28080.4 thousand hectares in 1990 to 25621.6 thousand hectares in 2015, respectively, the area of arable land from 4176.5 thousand hectares to 4043.6 thousand hectares, irrigated land from 3407.3 thousand hectares to 3288.2 thousand hectares, and agricultural arable land decreased from 4200.1 thousand hectares to 3694.2 thousand hectares. This underscores the urgency of ensuring food security [3; pp.15-18].

From the first years of independence, the country has implemented a strategy aimed at reviewing and improving the structure of agricultural crops on the basis of agrarian reforms to ensure Food safety. In particular, the implementation of the Program aimed at achieving grain independence in our country has acquired great socio-economic and political significance. If in 1990 more than half of the sown area was technical crops, including cotton, by 2019, their area was reduced by 35.1%. At the same time, the share of grain crop areas increased from 24% to 45.2% of total crop area (see Table 1).

The data in Table 1 show that in 2019, compared to 1990, the share of potato crop area increased by 2.0 times, vegetables by 3.2% to 5.3%. At the same time, the share of fodder crops decreased from 14.8% to 8.9%.

As a result of the gradual reform and diversification of agriculture in our country, over the years of independence, grain independence has been achieved, the production of nutritious agricultural products has grown sharply. In 2019, compared to 1991, the production of grain products increased by 4.2 times, potatoes by 847.5%, fruits by 595.5%, grapes by 363.9%, vegetables by 343.9%, melons by 226.2%. increased by%. At the same time, the volume of production of raw cotton decreased by 37.6%. Its share in the total volume of agricultural production decreased from 47.7% to 11%.

Structural changes are also taking place in the livestock sector in our country. During the years of independence, the number of cattle has increased more than 2.4 times, the number of cows has more than doubled. The number of sheep, goats and poultry more than doubled during the same period.

Sustainable development of local production of food raw materials is one of the main tasks of ensuring food safety in the Republic of Uzbekistan. The volume of production of agricultural products shows a steady growth trend in the last 10 years. The growth of agricultural production in 2017 was 41.7 percent compared to 2010. However, this trend is not typical for all categories of producers. This indicator was 68.6 percent in enterprises and 140 percent in households. In addition, production has decreased by 8.5% in the last 4 years [9; pp.12].

The results of the analysis show that households produced the main part of the product in a traditional way. The situation begins to change dramatically in the last 10 years. In 2000–2010, the main producers of agricultural and livestock products were households (Table 2). Socio-economic problems led to the loss of leading positions of manufacturers in this category. In addition, the scope of work of agricultural enterprises has increased significantly. The position of farms has also improved. Producers of this category produce almost a fifth of the crop in the Republic of Uzbekistan today.

The importance of private auxiliary farms in ensuring food security of the Republic of Uzbekistan remains high. Farms are focused on commodity production. Individual assisted living facilities vary greatly in their goals. Some farms have only subsidiary production characteristics. The main goal is to provide the population with food.

A distinctive feature of private auxiliary farms is their high level of stability in the conditions of the market economy. In the Republic of Uzbekistan, private auxiliary farms make up less than 15% of cultivated areas. At the same time, they produce more than a third of the gross agricultural product [5; pp.26].

In the conditions of the market economy, the importance of private auxiliary farms in providing the population with milk, dairy products, and beef has increased sharply. Analyses by economic categories, 72.3% of the total volume of agricultural products - peasant (personal assistant) farms, 24.7% - farms, 3.0% - agricultural farms shows that it corresponds to the organizations that carry out the activities of the company. The volume of agricultural products grown in 2020 amounted to 84.3 trillion soums or 104.3% compared to the corresponding period of 2019. The share of agricultural products in the total volume of agricultural products was 48.4%.

In 2020, all categories of farms produced 6,667.1 thousand tons. grain crops (2.4% more than in 2019), 2,432,700 tons. potatoes (1.6% more), 7,630.4 thousand tons. vegetables (2.7% more), 1,399.1 thousand tons. polys (4.2% more), 2,067,700 tons. fruits and berries (3.9% more), 1,275,300 tons. grapes (3.2% more) were grown.

We will analyze the composition of agricultural and livestock products produced in the Republic of Uzbekistan from 2000 to 2020. (Table 3). The results of the analysis show that during this period, we can see that the share of potatoes, dairy products, meat, eggs and dairy products has increased [6; pp.1-10].

If we compare and analyze the share of peasant (personal assistant) farms in the production of the main types of agricultural products, in 2020 meat (in live weight) will be 92.7% (12.4% more than in 2010 p), milk 94.7% (25.0% more than in 2010), potatoes 86.2% (34.2% more than in 2010), vegetables 76.9% (2010 - 18.5% more than in 2010), policy products made up 64.1% (27.2% more than in 2010).

Conclusion and recommendations. The Republic of Uzbekistan's system for ensuring food safety is built on three key pillars: assuring access to and consumption of food items, regulating and promoting food production in the agro-industrial complex, and streamlining the management of food safety. In our opinion, the following actions in the area of regulation and promotion of food production in the agro-industrial complex are part of the mechanism of food security:

- the creation and enhancement of the legislative and regulatory framework for food safety;
- budgetary support for the growth of food production. This comprises tax breaks, financial assistance, and subventions;
- support for monetary policy in order to stimulate food production. This involves implementing a system of preferential lending; regulating the export and import of food through non-tariff and customs duties;
- support for food producers; encouragement of investment in the agro-industrial complex (AIC). Support and promotion of farmers, Dehkan farms and landowners, businesses, and food industry businesses that produce agricultural food products are also necessary.

In order to achieve high production efficiency, it is necessary to further raise the volume and speed up the growth of agricultural food production in the Republic of Uzbekistan. This can be done by incorporating practical knowledge from other nations.
